The International Hurricane Protection Association, based in Florida, strives to be the industry leader on all issues that affect the hurricane protection industry by unifying suppliers, manufacturers, contractors, engineers, architects, code writers, and government officials. A goal of the Association is to provide quality hurricane protection systems, information, and education to help home owners, business owners, and local government officials minimize the damaging effects of hurricanes.

As the only and first ever Louisiana member of the Board, Eschette plans to bring her "outsider's view" to the table as the Association tackles some of the nation's toughest hurricane issues.
